Labour Says Papers Show Brethren Not Acting Alone

The Labour Party has released lobbying papers from the Exclusive Brethren that it says throw doubt on the church's claims its members are acting as individuals.

The Brethren's official Australasian spokesperson this week distanced the church from statements from members about election law reform.

But Labour's president, Mike Williams, says the 2003 papers show the members are acting as spokespeople for the church.

He says the same group which organised a campaign against the Labour and Green parties before the last election were speaking on behalf of the Brethren three years before.
