PI denies link to porno film

By Stuff.co.nz and NZPA | Tuesday, 15 May 2007

The private detective and former police officer who was used by the Brethren to follow the prime minister has denied being the source of a pornographic movie shown at Police Commissioner Howard Broad's home in Dunedin in 1981.

Police Minister Annette King today claimed Wayne Idour had played the movie featuring bestiality which is at the centre of a raft of allegations about police misconduct published by Investigate magazine at the weekend.

Idour today issued a statement completely denying the allegation.

He said he had told Investigate magazine editor Ian Wishart about the movie being shown and it was "ludicrous to suggest that I would have told Mr Wishart about the incident if it was I who had supplied the movie to the party that night, particularly as this may well have been a criminal offence at the time."

Idour also said he believed the movies were being shown through a projector, meaning he could not have shown a film as he does not know how to use one.

He said he recalled the film involving bestiality being screened amongst other movies of rugby games.

He said there were a lot of people in the room at the time and he expressed disgust to those around him when the bestiality clip came on.

"I categorically deny that I supplied the movie. Any allegations that I did are completely and totally false. I do not know who supplied it and I do not know who was operating the projector," Idour's statement read.

"It is just too long ago to recall specific detail and I am not prepared to speculate."

In September last year Idour admitted that he and a colleague had been hired indirectly by a member of the Exclusive Brethren religious sect to spy on Miss Clark and other Labour MPs.

He said his mission was to uncover "illegal activities" and he would soon reveal sensational information.

Nothing has since been revealed.

Broad has admitted the video showing bestiality was shown at a party in his house, but says it was without his prior knowledge and permission.

He has said he did not see the movie because he was elsewhere in the house at the time.

He has referred the allegations published in Investigate to the Police Complaints Authority.

King said it was unacceptable in 1981 for police officers to watch a pornographic movie at a party, and it was unacceptable today.
